writing expert and in 1894 he was officially appointed to report on the handwriting of the bureau in the celebrated Greyfus case. He was a witness for the prosecution, testifying before the Cour de Cassation on January 18, 1895. M. Bertillon was accused of making serious errors in his testimony. The Municipal Council of Paris ordered a resolution calling upon the Prefect of Police of Paris to dismiss him as director of the Anthropometric Department because of his mistakes. He lost his position on the following day, but he resumed his services in the department.

Because of his work in making the life of professional criminals such an unhappy one, M. Bertillon made a member of the Legion of Honor.

Invented a Metric Camera.

Among his inventions to aid in identification work is a camera for metric photos by which the parts photographed are measured.

M. Bertillon wrote several volumes on the subject of his researches and studies in criminology.

Inspector Lacroix was better acquainted with M. Bertillon than any other man in America. He was sent abroad in December, 1906, by William McAnis, then Police Commissioner, and again in 1911 by ex-Police Commissioner Waldo to study foreign police methods, and on each occasion he came in touch with Bertillon.

"M. Bertillon," said the Inspector yesterday, "was one of the best students and the quietest men I ever knew. He was very painstaking in instructing me in his system. He was above all an expert photographer, and one of his big interests was in metric photography. Of course his great interest was in the Bertillon system, and he didn't take up the finger prints until he had to. When I was in Paris he was using only four fingers in finger printing and stuck to his system, although later the one introduced by Henry of Scotland Yard calls for printing all ten fingers."

M. Bertillon once complimented Pinet for making an identification of a picture in a collection of 2,000,000 records in less than thirty minutes by means of the Bertillon measurements.

was one of the incorporators of the village in 1835, which he had named for his former business partner. The family fortune increased with the growth of the cotton and on the death of the elder Halsey he and Stephen B. Halsey took the management of its interests and continued to care for them until his death.

Mr. Halsey married Miss Abbie Van Der Voort daughter of one of the foremost residents of Astoria. They were prominent socially and gave liberally to churches and charity.

ZOE ANDERSON NORRIS.

Editor of the "East Side" and Organizer of the Ragged Edge Club.

Miss Zoe Anderson Norris, known as a writer and an editor of East Side, a magazine of irregular issue, died last night of heart disease at the Peoples Hospital. She wrote for newspapers and magazines and was the author of several books, the latest being "The Color of His Soul."

Her chief pleasures were the meetings of the Ragged Edge Club. The East Side came out whenever the spirit moved Miss Norris to issue a number. It was full of her thoughts on the lot of East Siders.

STEPHEN BOLLES HALSEY.

Son of Stephen A. Halsey, Who Was a Partner of John Jacob Astor.

Stephen Bolles Halsey of Astoria, Queens, died at his home yesterday of heart disease. He was born on July 1, 1839, at the Halsey homestead in Astoria. He is survived by his wife, two sons, Harold V. W. Halsey and F. R. Halsey, and a daughter, Miss Ruth Halsey.

He was a partner in the fur trade of John Jacob Astor. The partners discussed the manner of investing their profits. Mr. Astor deciding to invest in what is now Manhattan borough, and Mr. Halsey put his money into Long Island real estate. His holdings eventually comprised what was included in Astoria village, and he
